JACANARIVERLODGE.COM · STRUCTURE REVIEW

How the current site is structured, and the silo structure we propose

The current site has a menu, but no silos. Pages from different topics share dropdowns, 13 pages have no menu item, and the blog links mostly to itself. The proposal groups every page into three silos (Stay, Activities, Mjejane Reserve) with clear linking rules, keeping every live URL.

33
live pages

21
pages no other page links to 13

pages with no menu item

137
blog posts, about 81 on one topic

28
links from posts to pages, in total

1. The current menu

What a visitor sees today. Numbered boxes are pages filed under the wrong topic, or items that aren't pages at all.

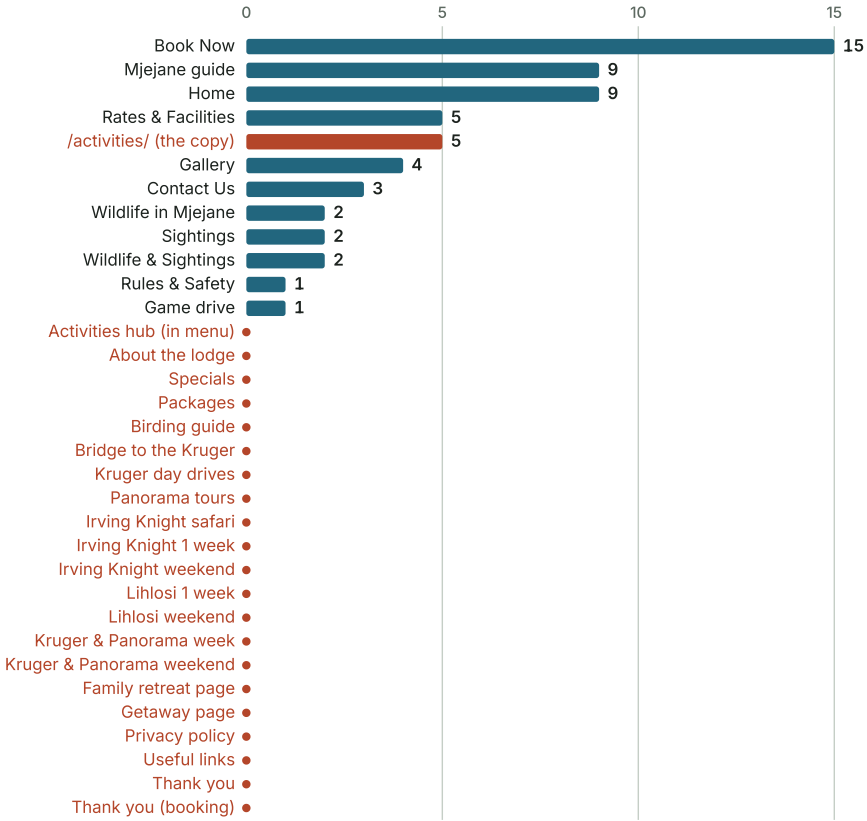

Their menu as it stands: nine items, with dropdowns that mix topics (red), 13 pages no menu reaches, and a 137-post blog. From the live site's HTML, crawled 29 Oct 2026.

wrong silo, not a page, or unreachable

2. How the current pages actually link

The menu is only half the picture. Google mostly follows links inside page content. This counts how many pages and posts link to each live page from their content.

Links into each of the 33 live pages from the content of other pages and posts (menu and footer excluded). Red: no content links at all. The real Activities hub gets none, while its leftover copy at /activities/ gets 5.

Most links that do exist point at Book Now. Supporting pages never link to their siblings, and the homepage content links to just two pages (Book Now and the Mjejane guide).

Where it goes wrong

The numbers match the red badges in the menu diagram.

1 Documents filed as pages

"Star Grading" and "Tourism Memberships" under Rates & Facilities open PDF certificates. They're trust badges, not pages, and belong in the footer.

2 Wildlife sits under Activities

Wildlife & Sightings is about the reserve, not something you book. It belongs in the Mjejane Reserve silo with the guide.

3 Book Now inside the reserve dropdown

A booking page filed under "Mjejane Game Reserve", and a second Book Now in the same menu. Conversion pages sit outside every silo.

4 Birding under the reserve

The birding guide is an activity, with its own guides and walks. Filed under the reserve, it can't support the Activities silo.

5 "Review Us" in the main menu

A link off the site to Google takes a menu slot from a real page.

6 Whole products hidden

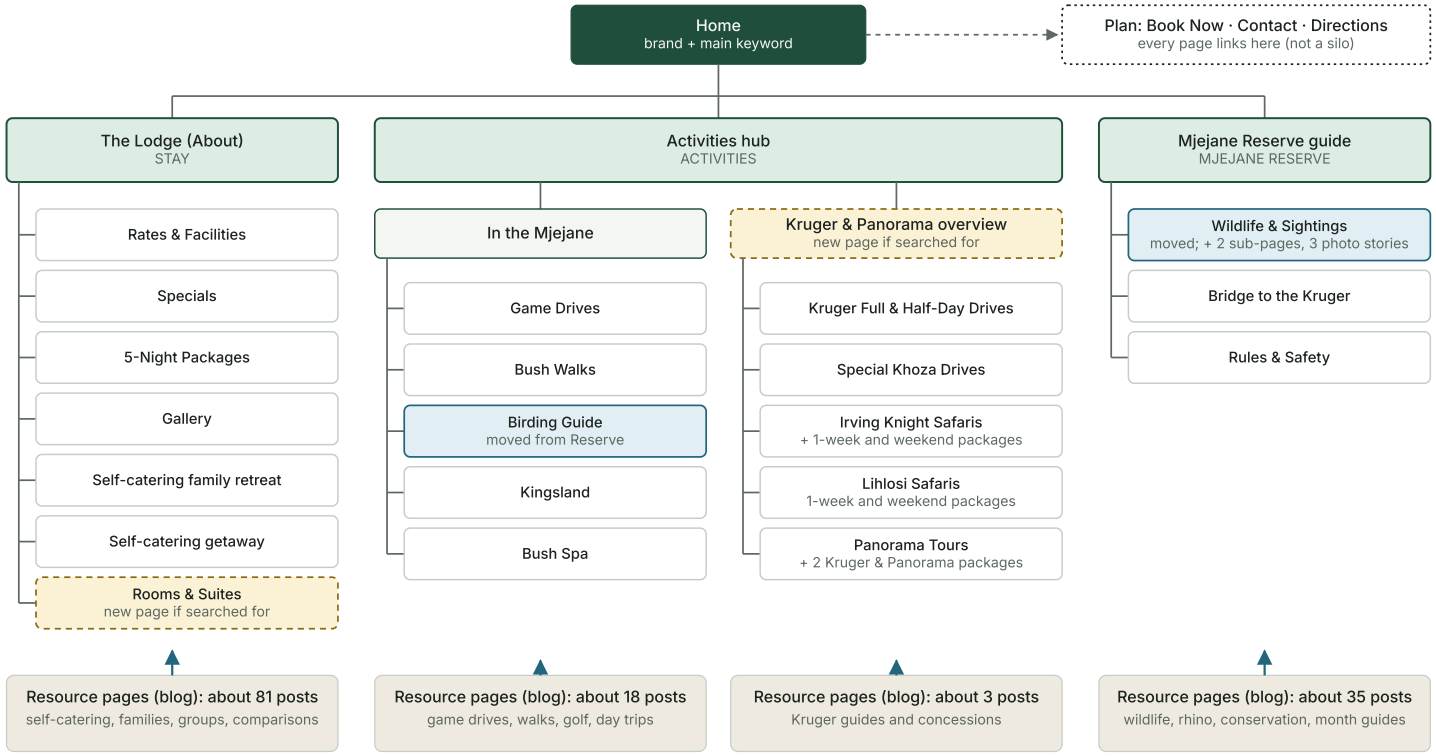

Kruger day drives, Panorama tours, six packages, the bridge page and even the About page have no menu item and no links. Only Google can find them. The Activities hub also sends Special Khoza and Irving Knight to another company's website.

7 The blog competes with the money pages

About 81 of the 137 posts chase the same self-catering stay topic, and several link to the homepage with "game lodges in Mpumalanga". The newest 3 posts get 113–125 links each; 91 posts get none. Bush walks, spa and Kingsland exist only as blog posts.

3. The proposed silo structure

Three silos, each with one hub and its supporting pages, and blog posts as resource pages underneath. Book Now and Contact Us stay outside the silos so every page can link to them. Every live URL stays as it is.

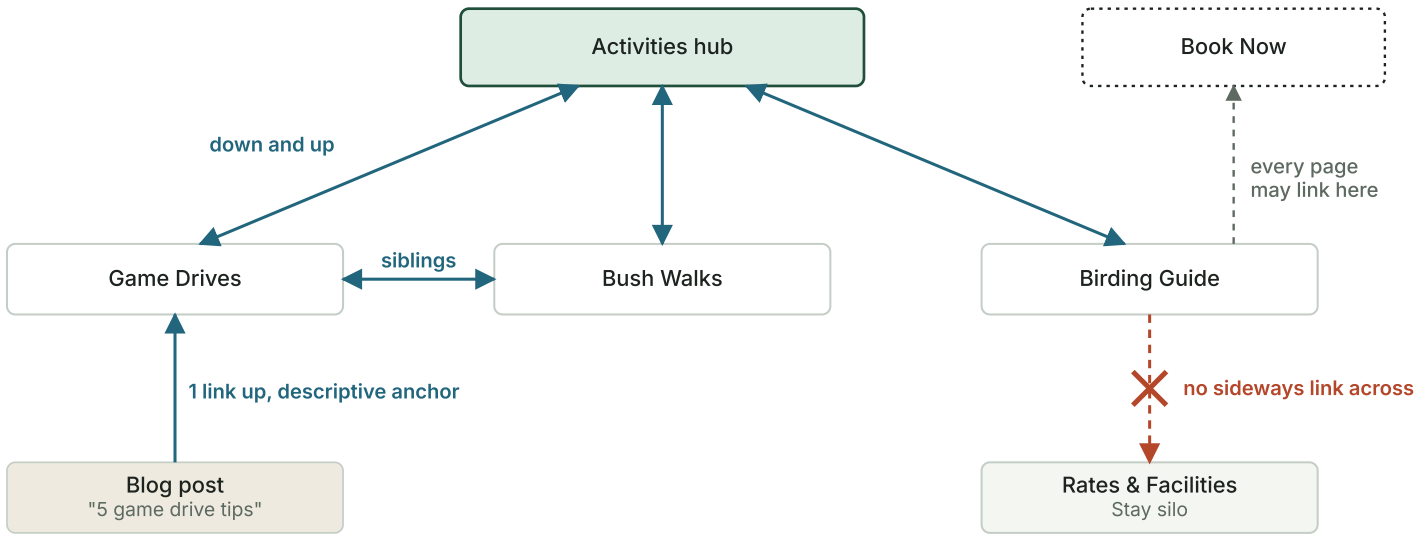

Proposed structure. Dashed gold boxes are candidate new pages (more in section 5). Blue boxes are pages that move to a different silo than today.

silo hub moves silo candidate page (needs keyword data) resource pages (blog)

4. Linking rules inside a silo

The structure only works if the links follow it. These are the rules for every page and post.

One silo up close. Links run up and down between the hub and its pages, sideways only between siblings, and up from blog posts. A sideways link into another silo (red) is the mistake to avoid.

Hub ⇄ page

Each hub links to all its supporting pages; each supporting page links back to its hub.

Siblings

Supporting pages link to related pages in the same silo (Game Drives ↔ Bush Walks).

Posts link up

Each blog post links to one page in its own silo, with a descriptive anchor, and to its hub.

Conversion is open

Any page can link to Book Now and Contact Us.

No cross-silo links

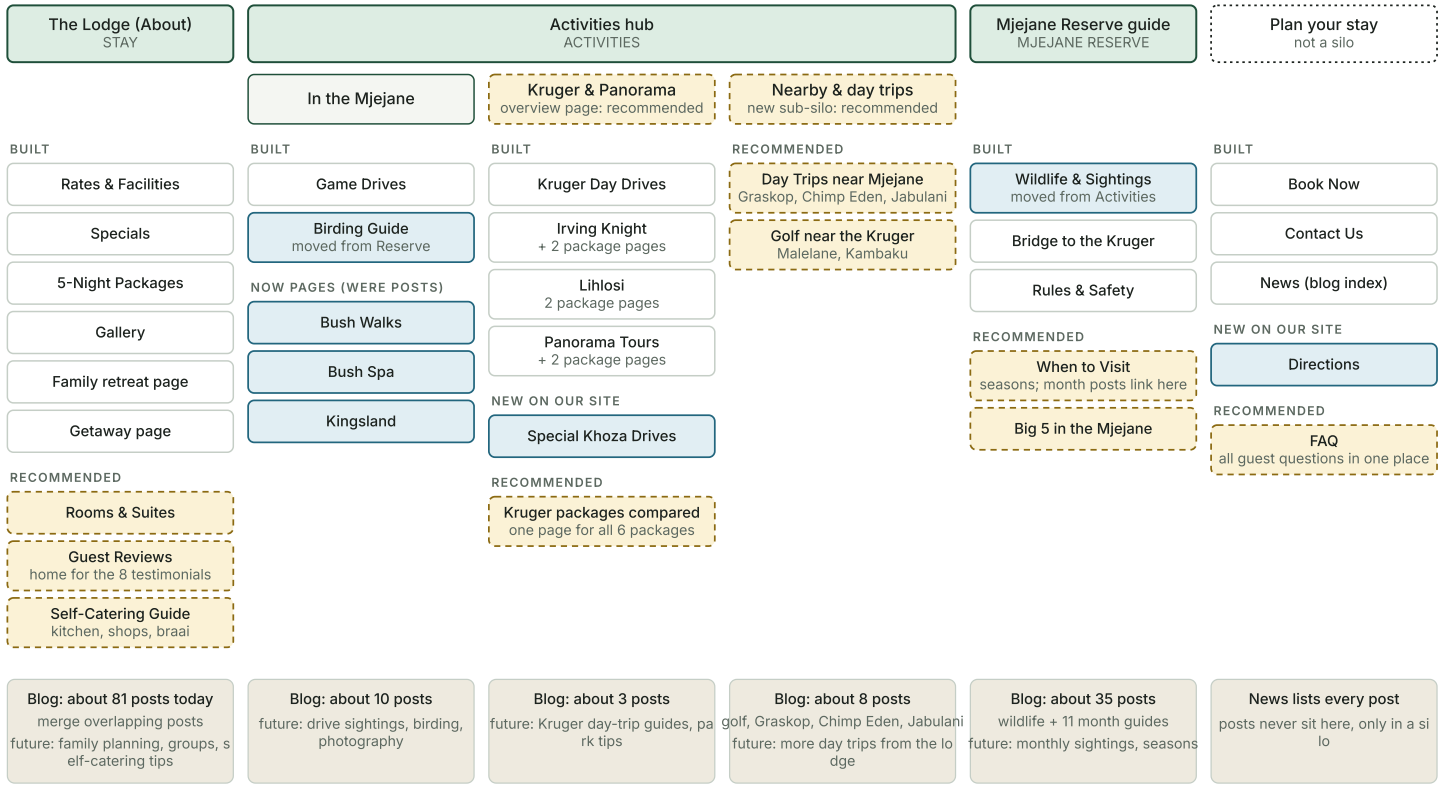

An activity page doesn't link sideways to Rates; cross-topic journeys go through the menu, the homepage or a hub.

One page per keyword

The homepage owns the brand and the main phrase; no post links to it with that phrase.

5. Where new pages and future posts go

The growth map. For each silo: what is already built, what is new on our site compared with the live one, the pages we recommend adding, and where the existing and future blog posts belong. Recommended pages are structural: each gives a group of pages or posts a proper home. Keyword research decides which ones get built first.

Growth map. Blue: new on our site, or moved to the right silo (bush walks, spa and Kingsland were blog posts on the live site). Dashed gold: recommended new pages. Bottom row: blog posts per silo today, and what future posts should cover.

Guest Reviews

Gives the 8 orphaned testimonial pages and the Google reviews one home in the Stay silo.

Kruger packages compared

One page comparing the 6 near-identical package pages, which then link up to it.

Day trips and golf

Gives the 8 day-trip and golf posts (Graskop, Chimp Eden, Jabulani, Malelane, Kambaku) pages to support.

When to Visit

Gives the 11 month and season posts (May, June, July, August, December) one page to link to, instead of competing with each other.

Rooms & Suites, Self-Catering Guide

Two answers guests look for that the site spreads across other pages today.

FAQ

Collects the questions now scattered across the homepage, the guide and the rates page.
